Praise for Wildbranch

"This collection of writing from Wildbranch resounds with fresh and engaging voices. Its organization into thematic sections reinforces a compelling ethical perspective on this beautiful planet and the fellow creatures with whom we humans share it."

—John Elder, Middlebury College

"One of the richest collections of environmental writing to emerge in years. A special virtue of this new collection is the range of voices offered, and student writers in particular will find the diversity of voices inspiring and empowering."

—Scott Slovic, University of Nevada, Reno

An Anthology of Nature, Environmental, and Place-based Writing

Edited by Florence Caplow and Susan A. Cohen
Foreword by H. Emerson Blake

Wildbranch: An Anthology of Nature, Environmental, and Place-based Writing is a powerful collection of essays and poetry by both prominent American environmental writers and exciting new voices. The poetry and essays by more than fifty contributors offer the reader glimpses into places as diverse as a forest in West Africa, the moors of Ireland, the canyons of the Sonoran Desert mountains, and the fields of New England, and they reflect the varied perspectives of field biologists, hunters, farmers, environmental educators, wilderness guides, academics, writers, and artists. The collection is an intimate portrait of the natural world drawn through the wisdom, ecological consciousness, and open hearts of these exceptional contributors.

The Wildbranch Writing Workshop, co-sponsored by Orion magazine and Sterling College, has encouraged thoughtful natural history, outdoor, and environmental writing for more than twenty years. The Wildbranch faculty has included its founder E. Anne Proulx; the essayists Edward Hoagland, Janisse Ray, and Scott Russell Sanders; the poet Alison Hawthorne Deming; and many other notable authors. Many have work included in the anthology.

Florence Caplow is a writer, Zen priest, and conservation botanist who has spent more than twenty-five years working to protect the endangered plants of the western United States. Her essays have been published in Tricycle, Nature Conservancy Magazine, Turning Wheel, Inquiring Mind, and Terrain.

Susan Cohen is a professor of English and women's studies at Anne Arundel Community College. She is the editor of Shorewards: A Collection of Women's Coastal Writings. Her essays have appeared in Sea Stories; Women Writing Nature: A Feminist View; Early American Nature Writers; and Gendered Landscapes.

Praise for Home Waters

"Wallace Stegner wrote: 'No place, not even a wild place, is a place until it has had that human attention that at its highest reach we call poetry.' In this fortunate pairing of place and poet, we learn about Utah's Provo River—a paradox of wildness and extinction, pioneering and restoration. We learn that the river is embedded in community—Mormon community—a fact inseparable from the place. And we learn about the poet who attends to this river, a man who turns out to be an insightful scholar, an exuberant fly fisherman, a devout pilgrim, and an expansive guide as these home waters descend from the High Uintas through defining stories of family and identity, to pour down the Jordan River to the Great Salt Lake."

—Stephen Trimble, author of Bargaining for Eden: The Fight for the Last Open Spaces in America

Home Waters

A Year of Recompenses on the Provo River

George B. Handley

People who fly-fish know that a favorite river bend, a secluded spot in moving waters, can feel like home—a place you know intimately and intuitively. In prose that reads like the flowing current of a river, scholar and essayist George Handley blends nature writing, local history, theology, environmental history, and personal memoir in his new book Home Waters: A Year of Recompenses on the Provo River.

Handley's meditations on the local Provo River watershed present the argument that a sense of place requires more than a strong sense of history and belonging, it requires awareness and commitment. Handley traces a history of settlement along the Provo that has profoundly transformed the landscape and yet neglected its American Indian and environmental legacies. As a descendent of one of the first pioneers to irrigate the area, and as a witness to an eroded environmental ethic, and the loss of orchards and open space, Handley weaves his own personal and family history into the landscape to argue for sustainable belonging.

In avoiding the exclusionist and environmentally harmful attitudes that come with the territorial claims to a homeland, the fly-fishing term "home waters" is offered as an alternative, a kind of belonging that is informed by deference to others, to the mysteries of deep time, and to a fragile dependence on water. While it has sometimes been mistakenly assumed that the Mormon faith is inimical to good environmental stewardship, Handley explores the faith's openness to science, its recognition of the holiness of creation, and its call for an ethical engagement with nature. Home Waters contributes a perspective from within the Mormon religious experience to the tradition of such Western writers as Wallace Stegner, Terry Tempest Williams, Steven Trimble, and Amy Irvine.

George B. Handley is a professor of humanities and comparative literature at Brigham Young University. He is the author of two books of literary criticism: Post-slavery Literatures of the Americas and New World Poetics: Nature and the Adamic Imagination of Whitman, Neruda, and Walcott.

Praise for The Way Home

"Anyone who is concerned about the numerous, local and global threats to the environment will find in McVey a kindred spirit who has articulated the dangers and an ethos to deal with them."

—Blair Oliver, founding editor of Front Range Review

"[The Way Home] ought to be read by politicians, corporate executives, every entrepreneur... and by all of us who have ever wondered who we are and what our role is in this magnificent and magnificently confusing world."

—Gary Holthaus, author of Wide Skies, Finding a Home in the West

The Way Home

Essays on the Outside West

James McVey

"A sense of place can be a complicated matter," writes James McVey in the prologue to his new collection of essays, The Way Home. Based on twenty years of living and traveling in the West, the collection includes essays on river running, backcountry skiing, fly-fishing, and backpacking—all describing various attempts to engage in meaningful contact with the elements of wild nature, and to have a deep firsthand knowledge of a place. With an essayist's breadth McVey engages ecology, geology, anthropology, psychology, and history as well as his own personal outdoor experiences to peer into the particulars of living in as complicated a place as the West. While the essays function within the tradition of western nature writing, they transcend regional issues insofar as they maintain a broader philosophical context that accounts for such global concerns as mass extinction and climate change.

The essays use backcountry experiences as occasions for reflection on such topics as nature and culture, conservation, and the human relation to the wild. They combine the naturalist's commitment to landscape with the adventurer's attention to technique and skill. The outdoor experiences function as ritualized activity, the purpose of which is to explore a specific relation with a place. As such, the essays consider certain nonrational ways of knowing the world, including a perception of aesthetics based on sensory participation with the more-than-human world. This gets to the heart of the essential connection in this work between its adventure themes and nature concerns—a connection very much concerned with issues of lifestyle and worldview. McVey describes his own journey in the West, traveling through the varying philosophical revelations wilderness presents—"a lifetime of questions"—finally landing on a conservation ethic, a feeling of home.

James McVey teaches classes in writing and literature at the University of Colorado. He is the author of The Wild Upriver and Other Stories, and Martha Maxwell: Natural History Pioneer. He currently lives in Eldora, Colorado.

Praise for Evolution and Ecology in the Southern Rockies and Intermountain Region

"A crucial assembly, an amazing amount of research, easy to read, . . . clean, and insightful. This is the kind of writing I like, when scientists become eloquent, not relying solely on nomenclature but telling stories anyone can understand. For any naturalist in the West, this book will be a cornerstone."

Evolution and Ecology in the Southern Rockies and the Intermountain Region

A Love Song to the West

Gwendolyn L. Waring

Evolution and Ecology was written to inform people about the wild world around us, with the idea that we all crave a connection to the natural world to ground us and give us a sense of place. It is also a book about change. While species are described throughout the chapters, the text is focused more on the profound processes that have shaped western ecosystems, based on a belief that understanding those processes is more meaningful than a list of names. The ways and the rapidity with which enormous ecosystems replace one another and sometimes even return as climates change are a magnificent testament to the tenacity of life.

The first book of its kind for this region, Evolution and Ecology takes a fresh look at the natural history of the southern Rocky Mountains and the Intermountain West region based on cutting-edge research, interviews with numerous scientists, and the author's personal experience. Drawing together many disparate fields, the book integrates the evolution of western ecosystems with the geologic and climatic history of the region. It is a passionate, humanistic, and yet scientific treatment of this area's ecosystems, how they function, and how they came to be through time; it is a wonderful guide for the general public and scientists alike.

Gwendolyn L. Waring is a scientist and artist based in Flagstaff, Arizona. She has a PhD in biology with an emphasis on plant-animal interactions and approaches her research as an evolutionary ecologist.

Call for Submissions The Wallace Stegner Prize in Environmental and American Western History

The University of Utah Press is pleased to announce the Wallace Stegner Prize in Environmental and American Western History, a $10,000 book publication prize. The prize submission criteria reflect the legacy of Wallace Stegner as a student of the American West, as a spokesman for the environment, and as a teacher of creative writing. The winning manuscript must emphasize research in primary and secondary sources and will demonstrate a commitment to quality writing and scholarly narrative that also appeals to more general readers. The winner of the prize will receive a $10,000 award and publication contract with the University of Utah Press. Prize submission guidelines may be found at www.UofUpress.com. Submission deadline is December 31, 2010.

2009 WALLACE STEGNER LECTURE

The Fourth West

Charles Wilkinson

Originally delivered at the Fourteenth Annual Symposium of the Wallace Stegner Center for Land, Resources and the Environment.

Charles Wilkinson views the history of the American West as being divided into three periods. The First West existed when only the American Indians occupied the land. The Second West began with the California Gold Rush and the rapid settlement of the region. The Third West began at the end of World War II when the American West experienced explosive growth that transformed the region from a largely rural environment to an urban environment. In this lecture, Wilkinson explores the question of whether the region is about to enter a new period, the Fourth West, when "we finally do know what we have and what we have to lose."

The Wallace Stegner Lecture serves as a public forum for addressing the critical environmental issues that confront society. The lecture is delivered in connection with the Wallace Stegner Center's annual symposium. The University of Utah Press is pleased to partner with the Stegner Center in publishing the lecture.

KUED, the University of Utah PBS-affiliate, produces award-winning programming on a wide range of topics. These DVDs represent the finest quality production and feature world-class cinematography and narration.

Secrets of the Lost Canyon

It has been called one of the most significant finds in North America in the past 50 years. Nestled in the heart of central Utah in Range Creek Canyon are the remains of a lost civilization that once thrived in the American Southwest.

For 1,000 years, the Fremont Indians lived in parts of the Great Basin and Colorado Plateau as hunter-gatherers and farmers. They left detailed art and symbols on the stone faces of canyons they inhabited and stored their grain high on cliff walls in well-built granaries that still survive. Then, 800 years ago, the Fremont seemingly disappeared.

Today, University of Utah archaeologists are surveying an entire canyon of some 2,000 largely untouched Fremont Indian sites. This KUED documentary captures a range of issues and challenges that threaten efforts to understand the past.

Maynard Dixon To the Desert Again

He survived the destruction of his city by earthquake and fire, the Great Depression, and the civilizing of the West. He spent over two decades sketching it for western novels, and then decades more on a quest to find and portray the "real" West—the vast space, intense silence, and profound spirit of the land and people of the American desert. Maynard Dixon captured the endless sky and towering mesas in paint and poetry.

Green River Divided Waters

Producer Nancy Green explores the past, present, and extremely uncertain future of the Green River from the perspective of natural resources in the balance. Since J. W. Powell's exploration and forecasts in the 19th century, the Green has been at the heart of the western experience and is arguably the birthplace of the modern environmental movement. It is also viewed as a critical component in blueprints for energy development and water diversion to serve exploding western populations.

Mopan Maya-Spanish-English Dictionary

Charles Andrew Hofling

This is a highly valuable dictionary of the Mopan (Mayan) language. In addition to its many entries, it also provides an introductory grammatical description, as well as general dictionary features such as parts of speech, examples, cross-references, variant forms, homophones, and indexes. The book also contains special sections on orthography and pronunciation unique to this important Mayan language, as well as translations into English and Spanish.

The dictionary has the merits well known from other dictionaries of indigenous languages of the Americas, preserving knowledge systems as they are encoded in vocabulary and providing valuable information for numerous fields, including Mayanists, Mesoamericanists, American Indian scholars, anthropologists, historians, linguists, students of Mayan hieroglyphic writing, and members of modern Mayan communities, among others.

Charles Andrew Hofling is a professor of anthropology at Southern Illinois University. His areas of interest are Mayan languages, historical linguistics, and language revitalization. He is the author of Itzaj Maya Grammar.

Archaeological Observations North of the Rio Colorado

Neil M. Judd, New Foreword by Richard Talbot

Archaeological Observations North of the Rio Colorado was originally published in 1926 as part of the Smithsonian Institution's Bureau of American Ethnology (Bulletin 82). It contains the report of six seasons of fieldwork undertaken by Neil M. Judd for the bureau between 1915 and 1920 in western Utah and northwestern Arizona. The original investigation set out to examine Pueblo-like sites near Beaver, Utah. During these six years, Judd's team covered a region from the Grand Canyon to the northern shore of the Great Salt Lake, east to the Green River and west into the deserts of Nevada.

This book is part of the University of Utah Press's ongoing effort to reprint selected out-of-print volumes that apply directly to Utah archaeology, to allow current students easier access and use of historic information.

Neil M. Judd (1887–1976) was a pioneer of southwestern archaeology. He participated in 24 investigations and served 39 years at the United States National Museum, a unit of the Smithsonian Institution. He was the principle investigator during the excavations of Pueblo Bonito in Chaco Canyon.

Richard Talbot is director of the Office of Public Archaeology at Brigham Young University.

Archaeology and the Native American History of Fish Lake, Central Utah

Joel C. Janetski
Occasional Paper No. 16

Native American partnerships with archaeologists have grown in number and importance since the passage of the Native American Grave Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA). The Fish Lake archaeological project in central Utah established such a partnership in 1995, just a few years after the enactment of NAGPRA. Brigham Young University archaeologists and member of the Koosharem and Kanosh Bands of the Paiute Tribe of Utah joined forces to explore the pre-European history of this high altitude lake basin. This volume presents the history of that project, the results of the archaeological and ethno-historical research, and interviews with Paiute tribal elders who present their thoughts on Fish Lake.

Shifting Sands The Archaeology of Sand Hollow

Richard K. Talbot and Lane D. Richens
Occasional Paper No. 13

Hidden beneath the beautiful shifting dunes within the Sand Hollow Basin of southwestern Utah are thousands of campsites dating from the Early Archaic period into Historic times. The sites attest to life in a marginal environment, where small groups of people moved outward from the nearby Virgin River into the surrounding landscape, seasonally exploiting a surprisingly rich variety of plants and animals. This report summarizes archaeological, geomorphological, botanical, and climatological studies that have expanded our understanding of Native American land use and subsistence in this hot desert environment.

Archaeology of Clear Creek Canyon

Popular Series No. 1

In the mid-1980s the Office of Public Archaeology excavated a series of sites in Clear Creek Canyon in central Utah in advance of I-70 construction. A tip by a local resident resulted in the discovery and subsequent complete excavation of a massive Fremont village, later labeled Five Finger Ridge. In addition, excavators sampled or fully excavated a series of shelters and other residential Fremont sites in the canyon. The abundance of new data and rich artifact yield led directly to the establishment of Fremont Indian State Park across the canyon. This book relates the history of this work and presents the findings of the research.

A Laboratory for Anthropology

Science and Romanticism in the American Southwest, 1846–1930

Don D. Fowler, Foreword by Brian Fagan

Initially published in 2000, this beautiful paperback reprint of respected archaeologist Don Fowler's A Laboratory for Anthropology tells the sweeping history of an idea, "The Southwest," through the development of American anthropology and archaeology.

For eighty years following the end of the Mexican-American War, anthropologists described the people, culture, and land of the American Southwest to cultural tastemakers and consumers on the East Coast. Digging deeply into public and private historical records, the author uses biographical vignettes to recreate the men and women who pioneered American anthropology and archaeology in the Southwest. He explores institutions such as the Smithsonian, the University of Pennsylvania Museum, the School of American Research, and the American Museum of Natural History, which influenced the southwestern research agenda, published results, and exhibited artifacts. Equally influential in this popular movement were the "Yearners"—novelists, poets, painters, photographers, and others—such as Alice Corbin, Oliver La Farge, Mabel Dodge Luhan, and Laura Adams Armer, whose literature and art incorporated southwestern ethnography, sought the essence of the Indian and Hispanic world, and substantially shaped the cultural impression of the Southwest for the American public. Fowler brings this history to a close on the eve of the New Deal, which dramatically restructured the practice of anthropology and archaeology in the United States.

Praise for A Laboratory for Anthropology

"As a thoughtful and well-illustrated introduction to the beginnings of southwestern archaeology for the general reader, A Laboratory for Archaeology has no rival."

—Brian Fagan, University of California, Santa Barbara

"A fascinating story accessible to all who are interested in the American Southwest. For those of us studying the history of anthropology, it is an essential reference for that foundation period in the initial conceptualization of the Southwest as a landscape and as an anthropological laboratory."

—J. Jefferson Reid, University of Arizona

Now Available: University of Utah Anthropological Papers, Volumes 1–117

Begun by the late Jesse D. Jennings, the University of Utah Anthropological Papers (UUAP) are a comprehensive series of more than one hundred scholarly papers focusing on site reports, primarily in the Great Basin and adjacent areas, informed by a strong theoretical component. For years many of these volumes have been out of print, with only selected early volumes reprinted in recent years. Now, for the first time in decades, volumes 1 through 117 are available once again from the University of Utah Press, printed on-demand on the Espresso Book Machine (EBM) at the Marriott Library, University of Utah. Because these books are reproduced from scans of the original volumes, quality varies. Returns will not be accepted on these volumes. UUAP volumes 120, 124, 125, and 126 remain available in their original print versions.

Prices vary according to the volume's page number: 40–200 pages, $15.00, 200–400 pages, $20.00

Island of Fogs

Archaeological and Ethnohistorical Investigations of Isla Cedros, Baja California

Matthew R. Des Lauriers

Located off the west coast of the Mexican state of Baja California, Isla Cedros—Island of Fogs—is site to some of the most extensive and remarkable archeological discoveries on the continent. Two sites dated to before 12,000 cal BP have been excavated, as well as portions of two large village sites dated to the last one thousand years. Among the artifacts discovered are the earliest fishhooks found on the continent.

Drawing on ten years of his own historical, ethnographic, and archaeological research, Matthew Des Lauriers uses Isla Cedros to form hypotheses regarding the ecological, economic, and social nature of island societies. Des Lauriers uses a comparative framework in order to examine both the development and evolution of social structures among Pacific coast maritime hunter-gatherers as well as to track patterns of change.

Because it examines the issue of whether human populations can intensively harvest natural resources without causing ecological collapse, Island of Fogs provides a relevant historical counterpart to modern discussions of ecological change and alternative models for sustainable development.

Matthew R. Des Lauriers is an assistant professor of anthropology at California State University, Northridge.

Ancient Complexities

New Perspectives in Pre-Columbian North America

Edited by Susan M. Alt

Many archaeologists have long been frustrated with the traditional, reductionist representation of complexity. Yet even after years of debate, there seem to be never-ending disagreements over the complexity of places like Chaco Canyon, Cahokia, and Poverty Point. This matters, because there are political and scholarly implications to calling any place or people more or less complex. In North America especially, given historical biases and the mound-builder myth, archaeologists need to rethink complexity as they seek to explain the past.

Ancient Complexities offers a current overview of what is meant by cultural complexity and how archaeologists study the development of complex societies in North America. Taking a critical look at how accepted definitions of complexity have bounded our thinking about ancient societies, this volume presents new theoretical perspectives and states a case for the need for different definitions in order to move this discussion ahead.

Susan M. Alt is an assistant professor of anthropology at the University of Indiana, Bloomington, and is an archaeologist studying Mississippian societies. She is currently excavating in southern Indiana, seeking to understand the homelands of people who migrated to Cahokia.

Simulating Change

Archaeology Into the Twenty-first Century

Edited by Andre Costopoulos and Mark W. Lake

Simulating Change explores the history, the state of the art, and the controversies in the use of computer simulation surrounding archaeology. Thanks to contributions from archaeological simulation pioneers such as Martin Wobst, the work of established veterans of the field like Mark Aldenderfer, and the work of innovative young scholars like Luke Premo, this collection addresses some of the main theoretical issues in archaeological simulation. It leads the reader through a reflection on the use of simulation and presents some cutting-edge applications. Far from the usual collection of case studies, Simulating Change focuses on the history, theory, and challenges of computer simulation as told by the main protagonists. It provides crucial background material for any undergraduate or graduate course that deals with quantitative and computational methods in archaeology and anthropology. The volume will be required reading for anyone interested in how computer simulation affects the investigation of past human societies.

Andre Costopoulos is an associate professor of anthropology and associate dean of Student Affairs at McGill University in Montreal, Canada

Mark W. Lake is a senior lecturer at University College London's Institute of Archaeology and degree program coordinator for the MSc in GIS and Spatial Analysis in Archaeology.

American Missionaries and the Middle East

Foundational Encounters

Edited by Mehmet Ali Doğan and Heather J. Sharkey

During the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, American missionary encounters in the Middle East set foundations for later U.S.–Middle East relations. Missionaries presented examples of American culture to Middle Eastern peoples, just as they interpreted the Middle East for Americans back home. These engagements prompt larger questions about the consequences of American Christian cultural projection into the wider world.

This volume focuses on regions that were once part of the Ottoman Empire in western Asia, the Balkans, and North Africa. Contributors explain the distinctly American dimensions of these missionary encounters, the cultural influences they exerted on the region, and their consequences for local nationalism, print culture, education, and more. This is an excellent resource for specialists in history, Middle Eastern studies, American studies, religious studies, missiology, and anyone interested more broadly in American engagement in the Middle East.

Mehmet Ali Doğan is an alumnus of Bilkent University in Ankara and received his PhD from the University of Utah. He teaches at the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences of Istanbul Technical University. He is currently preparing an annotated bibliography of American missionary activities during the Ottoman Empire. This is his first book.

Heather J. Sharkey is an associate professor in the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations at the University of Pennsylvania. She is the author of Living with Colonialism: Nationalism and Culture in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and American Evangelicals in Egypt: Missionary Encounters in an Age of Empire.

REANNOUNCING

The Search for God's Law

Islamic Jurisprudence in the Writings of Sayf al-Dīn al-Āmidī, Revised Edition

Bernard G. Weiss

Scholars praised the 1992 edition of The Search for God's Law as a groundbreaking intellectual treatment of Islamic jurisprudence. Bernard Weiss's revised edition brings to life Sayf al-Dīn al-Āmidī's classic exposition of the methodologies through which Muslim scholars have constructed their understandings of the divine law.

In this revised and corrected edition, Weiss provides a new introduction that gives an overview of Āmidī's jurisprudence and facilitates a deeper comprehension of the challenging dialectic of the text. This edition also includes an in-depth analysis of the nature of language and the ways in which it mediates the law. An index has been added.

Symbiotic Antagonisms

Competing Nationalisms in Turkey

Edited by Ayşe Kadioğlu and E. Fuat Keyman

Today, nationalism and nationalist sentiments are becoming more and more pronounced, creating a global emergence of ethnonationalist and religious fundamentalist identity conflicts. In the post-9/11 era of international terrorism, it is appropriate to suggest that nationalism will retain its central place in politics and local and world affairs for the foreseeable future. It is in this vein that there has been a recent upsurge of interest concerning the power of nationalist tendencies as one of the dominant ideologies of modern times.

Symbiotic Antagonisms looks at the state-centric mode of modernization in Turkey that has constituted the very foundation on which nationalism has acquired its ideological status and transformative power. The book documents a symposium held at Sabancı University, presenting nationalism as a multidimensional, multiactor-based phenomenon that functions as an ideology, a discourse, and a political strategy. Turkish, Kurdish, and Islamic nationalisms are systematically compared in this timely and significant work.

Ayşe Kadioğlu is a professor of political science at Sabancı University in Istanbul, Turkey.

E. Fuat Keyman is a professor of international relations at Koç University in Istanbul, Turkey.

‘Ulama’, Politics, and the Public Sphere

An Egyptian Perspective

Meir Hatina

The status of the Sunni ‘Ulama’ (religious scholars) in modern times has attracted renewed academic interest in light of their assertiveness regarding moral and sociopolitical issues on the Arab-Muslim agenda. This has led to a reassessment of the narrative of historians and social scientists, who usually depicted the ‘Ulama’ as marginal players in comparison with the new lay Islamists, and certainly with the Shia ‘Ulama’. The Sunni ‘Ulama’s vitality is undoubtedly related to the continuing Islamic resurgence, which since the 1970s has forced the political elites to rely increasingly on the religious establishment in order to neutralize the Islamist challenge, thus allowing the ‘Ulama’ greater freedom of activity.

Hatina’s study returns to an earlier period and shows that such vitality has its roots in the second half of the nineteenth and the early twentieth centuries. Hatina traces the diverse ‘Ulama’ reactions to this period of accelerated state building and national cohesion.

Meir Hatina is a lecturer in the Department of Islamic and Middle Eastern Studies, at the Institute for Asian and African Studies, Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
